

Cassell, Dessane Lopez and Cassie Packard. "Your Concise New York Art Guide for May 2021," Hyperallergic, 4 May 2021.

HYPERALLERGIC

Spring – and all of its pollen – is in the air. (Aren't you glad to be able to hide your runny nose behind a mask?)

Congestion aside though, there's plenty to get excited about in New York this month, from the return of the annual spring ritual of Frieze (here we go), to a glorious array of Melvin Edwards's sculptures in the Financial District, to the "feminist futures" charted at the Bronx Museum. Don't forget your mask!

–Dessane Lopez Cassell

Maren Hassinger: We Are All Vessels

Installation view of Maren Hassinger, We Are All Vessels, 2021, Susan Inglett Gallery, NYC
(image courtesy Susan Inglett Gallery, NYC)

When: through June 12

Where: Susan Inglett Gallery (522 West 24th Street, Chelsea, Manhattan)

Outsized vessels made from wire rope – Maren Hassinger's signature material – covered with sheer fabric hang from the ceiling in We Are All Vessels, the artist's second solo show at Susan Inglett Gallery. Paired with wire structures on the floor, the suspended containers evoke expansive resonances with the human body, a theme that the Los Angeles-born artist has explored for over four decades of art-making, across sculpture, video, and performance.