Artist and co-founder of BOMB magazine Sarah Charlesworth has died at the age of 66. For her most famous work, the "Modern History" series, Charlesworth reduced the front pages of newspapers across the world to only nameplates and images in order to examine the papers' changing use of photography and image. More recently, she exhibited her "Available Light" photo series, in which she manipulated natural light sources in her New York studio. A short documentary and interview about "Available Light" is below.
